Enthusiasts Invited and Workshop

nuts and memorabilia collectors can all enjoy the aspects of the game they most prefer. There will be sporting goods people with their exhibits, all the latest teaching and training equipment for baseball, a specialist on sports vision, and the Brigham Young baseball team in conjunction with Dane Iorg of the Kansas City Royals, Vance Law now of the Montreal Expos, Bruce Hurst of the Boston Red Sox and Jim Gott of the Toronto Blue Jays who will all be available for demonstrations of skills and drills that any player can use to improve his game. The major league players will also be available to sign autographs and visit with those who attend. Ed Anderson, from the Card Shop, will be there for the memorabilia nuts, who simply want to remember the "good old days" of baseball.

Drills will be presented which will be useful in teaching proper hitting, defense, pitching, baserunning and visual acuity skills. Qualified trainers will be present to give special training on stretching and care of the pitching arm. Following the first two hours which will be devoted to learning and discussing better techniques for baseball, Tommy Lasorda, Manager of the Los Angeles Dodgers will give the keynote address.

Events will get underway at 10 a.m. Saturday, January 19, in the West Annex of the Smith Fieldhouse and will end at approximately 2:00 p.m. Cost for the day will be $5.00 and participants may pay at the door. Anyone with an interest in baseball, no matter what your age, is invited to attend.
